

Alnico Magnets

Alnico magnets are a type of permanent magnet composed of an alloy of aluminum, nickel, cobalt, and iron, with the name "Alnico" derived from these elements. They were among the first widely used permanent magnets and have been in use since the early 1930s. Alnico magnets are known for their strong magnetic properties and excellent temperature stability, making them suitable for various applications.

